

David Ellis
PS News
(www.psnews.com.au)
9 June 2008

---

One for lunch: Robert Fiumara reckons his just-released 2007 Lillypilly Moscato is the closest things you'll find in a bottle to eating a bunch of just-picked grapes that have had a few hours chilling in the fridge.

"This is a wine that's delicate, soft and grapey with all the hallmarks of Muscat aromatics and enough acidity to balance the sweetness," he says. "Drinking it anytime reminds me of summer year-round."

Good buying at just $13.50 to quaff nice and cold with light desserts, peaches and rock melon with ice-cream, or a platter of fresh fruit and soft cheeses.

Luscious as eating a bunch of chilled, fresh-picked grapes

+